The Human Face of the Good News

Keenly aware of the growing corruption in his beloved Catholic Church of the early fifteenth century, John Hus saw a disconnect between the biblical witness and how the church was actually living out its purpose. Because worship services were conducted in Latin, common folk in his day would not have understood the words of Scripture that were being read and proclaimed; they were made to feel unworthy in receiving only the bread from the Lord's table; and they were led to believe that their very salvation could be secured through a donation to the church.

But what most pained Hus was that the church had largely become a matter of routine and procedure that did little to transform human hearts or society. For his outspoken opposition to this corruption, Hus was burned at the stake on July 6, 1415.

Sitting in our sanctuaries 602 years later in the summer of 2017, we can easily condemn the action back then of church leaders who were blind to the deeper meanings of Hus's attempts at reform. But today let us consider how perhaps our religious practice has become a routine, rather than a matter of the heart that transforms us into people of action.

As important as being together as a church is, and as much as the church needs the financial support of its members, the actions of transformed hearts beyond the walls of the church are what matters most in the kingdom of God.

Hus's fundamental passion for reform was to move the church beyond being an end unto itself. How are we, as the body of Christ today, being called into the world to be the human face of the good news that Jesus came to show us?

July 9, 2017

602ND ANNIVERSARY OF
THE MARTYRDOM OF JAN HUS (1369-1415)

Our service of Holy Communion this morning marks the occasion of the martyrdom of Jan Hus. On Saturday, July 6, 1415, the town of Constance, situated on both banks of the river Rhine, witnessed the last act of a tragedy. The Czech priest and preacher, marked as a heretic by Rome, passed the cemetery where his books were being burned and, in the next moment, he ascended the stake.

In 1400 Hus was ordained to the priesthood, and the following year was elected Dean of the Faculty of Arts at Prague University. Hus was especially impressed with the views of Oxford theologian John Wyclif, stressing the importance of preaching and the necessity of striving for a moral revival of the Church. In 1402 Hus was appointed a preacher at Bethlehem Chapel in Prague. From the pulpit of Bethlehem Chapel as well as at the University, Hus constantly promoted reform within the Church. The number of his friends increased, as did the number of his adversaries.

Finally, the Archbishop, Zbynek Zajíc of Hasenburk, forbade Hus to continue preaching. Hus did not obey. Hus's message of fidelity to the truth, passed on from generation to generation, forms the inner core of his legacy to the Church and to his nation. This message still needs to be heard by all who care for the truth: "Seek the truth, listen to the truth, learn the truth, love the truth, speak the truth, abide by the truth, defend the truth unto death" (Jaroslav Necas and Vaclav Starý, Master John Hus and the Town of Husinec).

In 1457, followers of Hus established in Kunvald (currently in the Czech Republic) an intentional community they called the Unitas Fratrum, Latin for "Unity of Brethren," which ultimately became known as the Moravian Church. This year marks the 602nd anniversary of Hus's martyrdom.
